To Whom It May Concern:

I first met Dimitrios Mistriotis in 2003 during his Computer Science University days when his BSc thesis that I supervised became a central component to a complicated interdisciplinary and multinational research project on economic incentives in computer networking. So, later, in 2007, when a business opportunity presented itself and I needed to build a small team to deliver a complex web project to a startup, Dimitrios, with his technical skills and business acumen, was an obvious choice to lead that web project, which he delivered efficiently and effectively, in cooperation with stakeholders on multiple time zones.

Dimitrios is one of the most reliable IT professionals I have known in my career. He "gets" technology and its connection to real-world problems. He is effective, energetic, quick-witted and wiser than his years, thanks to his breadth of experience combined with an uncanny ability to dissect (and blog about, and even write books about) the tech landscape. His sincerity and personal integrity cannot be overestimated. I would recommend him as part of the answer to any complex tech-oriented problem.
